There aren't many bands who arrive at their 50th anniversary on a creative roll, still luring in new generations of fans, making Top 10 albums, and doing so by releasing music every bit as challenging and inventive as their earliest recordings. In fact, there is precisely one: Sparks.

Now, as their creativity and resilience is celebrated in 'The Sparks Brothers' - a new film by Edgar Wright (Shaun Of The Dead, Baby Driver) - Sparks release 'Left Out In The Cold' from their acclaimed 25th album 'A Steady Drip, Drip, Drip'. Originally released digitally in May 2020 with a physical release in July, the album was met with rave reviews and returned the band to the UK top 10.
